What makes a workplace great?

Eight principles used by high functioning organizations
High-functioning organizations understand one of the fundamental keys to success: having a workplace that not only makes the best use of space, but also uses the space appropriately and strategically.
In doing so, they create a shared culture and an environment that supports its people, accurately reflects the way people work and aligns the physical workplace with business goals.
A great workplace is built on collaboration.
A great workplace reflects the company’s brand and is aligned with its values.
A great workplace provides increased choice and autonomy.
A great workplace is agile.
A great workplace has the ability to adopt and integrate technology trends.
A great workplace understands that “the workplace is the best place to work.”
A great workplace creates a quality experience for its employees.
A great workplace integrates the three biggest items: people, technology and space.
Thank you

Head of Workplace Strategy, Americas
Bernice Boucher, Managing Director
+1 212 418 2619
Bernice.Boucher@am.jll.com